in this report the committee criticises the uk border agency for failing to explain why 350 foreign national prisoners due to be deported are still in the country the agency provided the committee with a breakdown of the issues with the deportation process of 1 300 prisoners who were released between 1 april 2010 and 31 march 2011 the largest group making up 27 of the total was labelled unknown the committee also found that the agency has not resolved all of the asylum legacy cases first identified in 2006 within the promised 5 year timeframe instead 18 000 ongoing cases are still awaiting a final decision the committee highlights its concern at the dramatic increase in files transferred to the controlled archive where the agency has lost contact with individuals in the past six months the files which are placed in the archive when every effort to track an applicant has been exhausted numbered 40 500 in march 2011 by september 2011 it had increased to 124 000 a series of specific recommendations are made the government should commission a detailed investigation into financial waste included the writing off of bad debts overpayments to staff and asylum applicants and failure to collect civil penalties there should be better liaison between the agency and hm prison service the agency is losing too many appeals at immigration tribunals and should raise the quality of its representation all staff must be aware of the existence of bogus colleges which exist only to sponsor visa applications in this home affairs committee s report into the work of the uk border agency it criticises the agency for failing to deport more than 600 foreign national prisoners who were released between 1999 and 2006 and are still in the country and for failing to clear the controlled archive of lost applicants at the current rate it will take a further 4 years to close all cases the committee found that the agency has still not resolved all of the asylum legacy cases first identified in 2006 instead there are 17 000 ongoing cases still awaiting a final decision and the agency appears to be discovering more cases the committee remains uncertain over the feasibility of the government s e borders timetable it finds it difficult to see how the scheme can be applied to all rail and sea passengers by december 2014 it acknowledges that the government must have a comprehensive e border system if it is to be effective however it needs clarity on policy and practicalities for achieving this the committee makes a series of specific recommendations aimed at improving the working of the agency concerning appeals bogus colleges data provided and use of statistics it calls on the home office to act immediately to deal with the public scepticism over the effectiveness of the uk border agency and to require clarity in the information produced for both the public and parliament since the uk border force was separated from the uk border agency it has met some important objectives such as reducing queuing times to provide value for money however it needs to perform effectively and in a sustained way across the full range of its activities border force officers reported that staff shortages and the requirement to prioritize full passenger checks while managing queue times often prevented their performing other important duties such as checking freight in addition during the first months of 2012 13 the border force s performance in some of its activities such as seizures of cigarettes and counterfeit goods entry refusals and detecting forgeries was below target the home office s internal auditors confirmed that the 2012 olympics and wider resourcing issues had an effect on the border force s ability consistently to resource customs controls the border force s workforce lacks organizational identity the border force consists largely of officers who previously worked in separate customs and immigrations agencies who typically still identify themselves as ex customs or ex immigration to meet the demands the border force is recruiting more staff despite this there are continuing staff shortages at the border the border force has not established whether it has the resources it needs to deliver all its objectives it needs to deploy staff flexibly to respond to its competing demands but is prevented from doing this as efficiently as possible because almost a fifth of its workforce is employed under terms and conditions that restrict working hours to fixed periods during the week the points based system introduced by the uk border agency in 2008 was for the most part designed well and provides an adaptable means of meeting the uk s work related immigration policy objectives however the system is not yet delivering its full potential for value for money the points based system scores migrants against a number of assessment criteria including their skills the system appears to have attracted skilled applications although the evidence is not robust the system has so far worked effectively to meet needs of employers although a third of sponsoring employers surveyed wanted to recruit more skilled foreign workers than they were able to sponsors and migrants often struggle to get the information and assistance they need and one fifth of all sponsors would pay an additional charge to receive better customer service the agency needs to improve its management information at present it lacks the ability to identify easily individuals whose visas have expired and it does not do enough to check that migrants leave the uk if they have no right to remain while it has some contact details for an estimated 181 000 failed applicants overall the agency cannot be sure how many have left the uk poor information systems are also undermining the ability of the agency to manage the risk that sponsors are failing to comply with immigration rules it rates as compliant some 96 per cent of its 22 000 sponsoring employers but is unable to say how many it has visited to confirm this
