in this original and illuminating study mark knights reveals how the political culture of the eighteenth century grew out of earlier trends and innovations arguing that the period 1675 1720 needs to be seen as the second stage of a seventeenth century revolution that ran on until c 1720 the book traces the development of the public as an arbiter of politics the growth of a national political culture the shift towards a representative society a crisis of public discourse and credibility and a political enlightenment rooted in local and national partisan conflict the public acquired a new status in the later stuart period as a result of frequent elections the lapse of pre publication licensing the emergence of party politics the creation of a public debt and ideological conflict over popular sovereignty these factors enlarged the role of the public and required it to make frequent acts of judgement yet contemporaries from across the political spectrum feared that the public might be misled by the misrepresentations peddled by their rivals each side and those ostensibly of no side discerned a culture of passion slander libel lies hypocrisy dissimulation conspiracy private languages and fictions truth appeared an ambiguous political matter but the reaction to partisanship was also creative for it helped to construct an ideal form of political discourse this was one based on reason rather than passion on politeness rather than incivility on moderation rather than partisan zeal on critical reading rather than credulity and the realisation of those ideals rested on infrequent rather than frequent elections finding synergies between social political religious scientific literary cultural and intellectual history representation and misrepresentation reinvigorates the debate about the emergence of the public sphere in the later stuart period
